

Chapter 1: The Basics

One of the biggest perks of having a job that allows you to work from home is that with the proper setup, you can work from your RV anywhere in the world. In this chapter, we take a quick look at what you need in order to successfully make the transition from working from your home to working from your RV.

The two most important things you need:

1. A remote job
2. An RV

Once you have a job that allows you to work from home, and you have an RV that provides a mobile office space, you're ready to set up your RV to make it a functional office on wheels.

In this guide, we dive deeper into each of these items. To give you an idea of where to start, you'll need:

1. A designated workspace
2. A stable WiFi connection
3. A routine
4. Clearly established working hours and expectations of your work environment
5. A plan for moving and travel days

Working from an RV is similar to working from home, but there are a few adjustments and things to consider in order to make it successful. If you've already successfully worked from home for any stretch of time, you can apply the things that helped you in a sticks-and-bricks home to your mobile office situation as well. In fact, if you already have experience working from a home office, the transition to working from an RV will be easy.

The most challenging part of working from an RV is having a stable WiFi connection and balancing your time between work and play (it's very tempting to just go play). With the proper office setup and parameters in place, you'll be able to not only succeed at working from an RV but also enjoy it.
