

Step 4: The Final Step

Congrats, you've made it to the final step. Getting organized takes some time upfront but once you have your organizational systems in place, it's just a matter of maintaining them.

Each item in your RV now has a home. When you use an item, or if you find something sitting out, you know where it belongs. It's much easier to stay organized by establishing a habit of always returning an item to its designated place. Packing up on travel days is also a much quicker process when everything is already put away.

If you do have items without a home, now is the time to create a drop zone.

Creating a Drop Zone

A drop zone is a temporary place to store loose items until they're placed in a permanent location. The drop zone should consist of a small container, preferably with a lid, so you don't create a habit of putting everything in there.

Now that loose items are put away in the drop zone and all of your items have a home, you're officially organized.

Step 4: The Final Step

As you continue to travel in your RV, you may want to change some things around—that's totally fine. The key to staying organized is building the habit of giving everything a home. If you use something, return it to its place when you're done. If you buy something new, find a designated area for that item, or practice the one-in-one-out method and donate something you already own.

We hope you fall in love with your newly-organized space and enjoy the quickness and ease of packing up your RV. Getting to this point took a lot of work, but the time invested pays off.

“Fall in love with empty spaces, and remember it’s okay to leave room to breathe!”

- Xiamora Romero